Outstanding NCEA Results.

January 2020

The Education Review Office (ERO) is the government department that evaluates and reports on the education and care of students in schools. Most recently ERO has reported on One Tree Hill College in 2015 and 2020. Here are some of the highlights from the outstanding 2020 ERO report:

- Students develop and achieve valued outcomes that include:
 - a sense of belonging and inclusion in an environment that values diverse cultures
 - developing wellbeing and self-management towards self-efficacy
 - confident engagement in learning through positive supportive relationships with staff and peers
 - effective transitions into the college's environment and expectations.
- The school can draw on existing strengths in:
 - capable leadership that guides ongoing evaluation and adaption of practices and systems for better student outcomes
 - an inclusive and collaborative school culture
 - a coherent approach to building professional capability
 - growing students' self-efficacy and confidence as learners.
- The college's inclusive, collaborative culture promotes a sense of collective responsibility for student wellbeing and academic achievement.
- Students are known by, and connected with, many key adults who believe in their potential and support their progress and pathways.
- Pastoral care and learning support services assist students with additional learning and behavioural needs to succeed in their learning.
- Well-established partnerships with external organisations help to resource and support curriculum opportunities.
- Parents appreciate teachers' and leaders' timely and responsive communication about their children's wellbeing, engagement and achievement.
- Year 9 transition practices and the citizenship programme are aimed at supporting students to quickly gain confidence and familiarity with college life and expectations.
- The whānau structure enables strong relationships between students, and with their teachers and leaders in each whānau. This structure also benefits families.
- Leadership capability guides a teaching culture that demonstrates an openness to learning.
- Leaders and teachers evaluate and adapt systems, structures and practices to relevant learning pathways and improved student outcomes. This commitment is underpinned by a strong belief that students can achieve their potential and accelerate their progress when they can access meaningful opportunities, resources and programmes.
- Student perspectives are sought in the evaluation and shaping of curriculum programmes and practices.
- Leaders continue to build and sustain leadership and teaching capability.
- Teaching inquiry and professional learning groups are focused on adapting practices and programmes to enable greater student engagement and achievement.
- Leaders and teachers continue to develop strategies to promote students' learning self-efficacy and progress.
- NCEA achievement information over the last four years at all levels shows the college's steady upward trend and is now above national achievement in Levels 1 to 3.
- Senior leaders have identified the need to develop targets to promote greater achievement for Māori students.
- NCEA data show that the majority of Māori students working at NCEA Level 1, 2 or 3 achieved these qualifications.
- The college continues to focus on raising student achievement in NCEA. In particular there have been significant upward shifts for Pacific learners.
- Almost half of students at NCEA Level 1 achieve with endorsement and a third at Level 2.
- The school provides international students with a high quality standard of education and care and they make good progress overall.
- Students receive personalised language support, achieve academic success and enjoy many opportunities to participate in school activities.
